Ascension Planetary Grid and Field

This document outlines the conceptual framework and multi-dimensional architecture of the Ascension Planetary Grid and Field, a dual-matrix system designed by Chris Comish to ensure the long-term preservation and global accessibility of spiritual teachings. Structured as a balanced network of 24 distinct nodes, the framework combines 12 physical anchors—comprising printed volumes preserved in institutional archives, libraries, vaults, and geographic repositories, including the Library of Congress, Rice University, and the Arctic World Archive—with 12 digital anchors distributed across academic repositories, decentralized storage systems, and global publishing platforms. This layered architecture is intended to provide redundancy and resilience against data loss, censorship, or technological disruption. The document further explores the concept of an Ascension Field generated through the interaction of these archival anchors and a broader network of spiritually awakened individuals, forming a 43.2-million-node planetary grid associated with 432 Hz harmonic resonance. Grounded in principles of free will, non-interference, and open access, the model is presented as a self-sustaining framework for preserving spiritual knowledge, supporting energetic alignment, and contributing to humanity's long-term evolutionary development.
